CJIS: Serving the Nation for Two Decades

Twenty years ago this month, then-FBI Director William Sessions approved the consolidation of the Bureau's criminal justice information systems into a singular entity to be known as the Criminal Justice Information Services Division (CJIS) that would be located in Clarksburg, West Virginia. Since 1992, we have continued to enhance our existing information systems and develop new systems and initiatives. And as we move forward into the future, we will continue to innovate our information and identification systems to equip our law enforcement, national security, and intelligence community partners with the criminal justice information they need to protect the U.S. while preserving our nation's civil liberties.
